ECUADOR

The economic value of Preventive Medicine has attracted international attention. The good results obtained in cleaning up the Panama Canal Zone by Major Gorgas of the United States army are demonstrations or examples that will easily convince anyone of the value of preventive measures. Under his direction the Panama Canal Zone has been converted from a pest ridden tropical country to a country as healthful as any of the large cities in the United States—a result hardly conceivable before this demonstration.

The foremost men of all nations have been closely watching the progress of public health matters in the Panama Canal Zone. Recently Ecuador requested the United States to permit Colonel Gorgas to come there for the purpose of cleaning that country. Our government has sanctioned this request, so that Dr. Gorgas may go to Ecuador for the purpose of demonstrating the value of Preventive Medicine. The leading people of Ecuador have been convinced that money judiciously spent on sanitary measures is a rich investment.

The people of Missouri, like the people of Ecuador, can well afford to look into the value of preventive measures and adopt means to put them into effect.
